Oil Open Forum Proves Interesting

—To Slim, But Enthusiastic Crowd

The oil industry is confident that more oil will be discovered in western Canada and this optimism is based on several factors, said S. P. King, Calgary, General Manager, Merrill Petroleum Ltd. during an open forum on oil at the Opera House Monday night.

The meeting was one of a series of open forums on oil arranged through the co-operation of the Canadian Petroleum Association and provincial Chambers of Commerce and other organizations. Forums will be held throughout Alberta during the next few months to give rural and urban residents clear and correct information concerning the petroleum and natural gas industry.

One of the factors creating the optimistic outlook for further oil discoveries is the size of the oil hunting ground in western Canada covering some 770,000 square miles.

Mr. King said another important factor "is that the industry has only scratched the surface as far as oil exploration is concerned in this vast area." To date in western Canada one well has been drilled for every 178 square miles of prospective hunting ground. In the United States, one well has been drilled every 12 square miles. Another reason for optimism is the steady improvement of the techniques of oil exploration; "we have no reason to doubt that further improvement will take place in the future."

"For years agriculture has been one of the mainstays of the Canadian economy," he said. Today, there was a new partner and together, the team of Western agriculture and Western oil will make increasing contributions to this Canada of ours."

Sketching the development of western Canada oil industry Mr. King said that Canada's crude oil reserves in 1946 totalled approximately 72,000 barrels. Today the reserves were estimated to be slightly more than 2,000,000,000 barrels.

In 1946 oil wells in the West produced an average of some 21,000 barrels a day. Currently, they are producing approximately 270,000 barrels daily. Too in 1946, Canada produced less than 10 per cent of her oil needs while for 1954 it is estimated she will produce more than fifty percent of requirements, despite the fact that oil consumption has doubled.

In terms of money spent, he said the "two dozen or so" oil companies operating in Western Canada in 1946 exploration and development this year spent about $1,000,000 a month on oil more than 200 companies will spend over $1,000,000 a day for the same thing.

What did all this mean to the average Westerner? Because of an increasing supply of local crude oil there was a corresponding increase in the local supply of petroleum products. Thus, as crude oil supplies increased Western refiners found it economical to build new refineries and to expand the capacities of their existing plants.

For this reason, refinery capacity in Western Canada had increased four fold since 1946 and Edmonton, which had no refineries at that time, now has three.

Because of these factors, since 1948 based on prices in principal cities which are the major refinery centres, the wholesale price of gasoline across the prairies has dropped nearly 14%. The wholesale price does not include the provincial tax - which in Alberta is 10 cents per gallon - or the dealer margin.

The oil revenue received by Alta. was another item of considerable importance. Mr. King said. Since 1946 more than $345,000,000 had been received by the provincial government from royalties, rentals, bonuses, and other payments.

The wells of Alberta could produce far more oil than the refineries here could use, he added. As a result, Alberta was filling the needs of other provinces and Alberta oil was flowing east to as far as Sarnia and Clarkson Ontario, and west to Vancouver area and into the State of Washington.

Contrary to popular belief oil does not exist in underground pools or lake. Rather it exists in the pores of rocks and sandstone. The pores in the rock sandstone, or limestone are connected together and it is through these connecting channels that the oil flows to the well bore when a hole is drilled in the reservoir, said Cal Franke, Chief Petroleum Engineer Cascade Drilling Co. Ltd. as he described drilling, production, and conservation.

In the early days of the industry the importance of the "driving mechanisms" was not fully recognized, nor fully utilized; therefore, much recoverable oil was lost forever. As our technical knowledge of reservoir behavior increased, we have been able to devise more efficient methods of recovery utilizing to a greater extent the energy provided by the natural forces at work in the reservoir. Consequently as much as 80% of the oil in place has been recovered in some fields.

At one time it was believed that once the natural energy drives in the reservoir were depleted, the oilfield for practical purposes was exhausted. Now, we are able to increase recovery through the supply of energy to the reservoir from external sources. The extensive use of pressure maintenance and secondary recovery methods, such as water flooding and gas injection, has resulted in significant increases in oil recovery from reservoirs that in earlier years would have been abandoned.

In the early stages of the life of a field, intensive study is made of the conditions in the reservoir in order that the maximum amount of oil may be recovered from the field.

The production allowances set by the Alberta Petroleum and Natural Gas Conservation Board were based on reservoir data which in most instances were supplied to the board by the operating companies.

Mr. Franke said the fate of production was not an arbitrary one; "All concerned co-operate in arriving at these allowable figures because all concerned are vitally interested in securing the maximum amount of oil from the reservoir."

Prorating and conservation, often confused by the layman, were not the same thing, he said. Conservation was the efficient production of oil so that the maximum economic recovery could be achieved. Prorating, on the other hand, meant simply the sharing of the available market equally among all producers.

Mr. Franke said "We in the oil business make every attempt to secure the maximum amount of oil from the reservoir, and like the farmer because our market is restricted, our production is prorated so that each producer will receive his share."

Land Leasing, Mineral and Surface Rights

Some of the many difficulties experienced in land leasing and mineral and surface rights negotiations were described by Robert Galbraith, Asst. Chief Landman - Texico Exploration Co. He compared oil seekers to prospecting home builders and farmers and said that under the laws of the province an oil company which "wishes to drill for oil on land where the farmer does not own the minerals, has right of entry to the land". This law was not peculiar to Western Canada, but had its roots in British Common Law.

There is a basic difference, however between the oil seeker and the home builder. The home builder is concerned with the surface - the oil seeker is concerned with what lies well beneath the surface. In the oil business, land acquisition means the securing of leases to mineral rights, and not all the minerals at that. The leases that a land man secures from mineral owner cover in most cases, only petroleum natural gas and related hydrocarbons. As we can see, therefore the terms land acquisition, land men, land department and so on are really misnomer. However in oil exploration, the word land (continued on page three)

The flared full length skirt had a slight train. Her three quarter length veil of lace bordered nylon mistery from a small fitted cap that was encrusted with silver cord. A single strand of pearls and small pearl earrings were her only jewellery. She carried a bouquet of red roses and white carnations.

OPEN FORUM

is a commonly used term for mineral rights acquisitions.

In conclusion, Mr. Galbraith said that while the biggest part of a landman's job is the securing of leases to mineral rights, an important part of his job is concerned with the surface. As I have just pointed out, the land men negotiate with farmers on whose land wells will be located. In addition to land for wellsites, they also negotiate for such matters as pipe line right of way, battery locations, flow lines and other requirements. In all these instances, the oil companies try, where ever possible, to conduct their operations in the manner best suited to the surface owner in order to enable him to continue to conduct his farming operations with the least inconvenience.

EXPLORATION

Drilling a wildcat well is an expensive business and those who look for oil don't like to drill them unless they have a reasonable hope they will find oil, said Aubrey Kerr, Chief Geologist Oilwell Operators Ltd. speaking on oil exploration.

He also stated that despite all the advances that have been made in the science of geology and geophysics, the best that oil seekers can say after their exhaustive studies is "In this place we think you might find oil". There is only one way to definitely determine whether oil is present and that by drilling.

Mr. Kerr explained the work of geologists, geophysicists, and seismograph crews in the search for oil. He also described some of the latest technical devices being used in the oil search throughout western Canada.

The Moderator for the evening was Larry Iveson, Field Representative, Imperial Oil Ltd. with program under the direction of Tom Steel Public Relations Officer for the Canadian Petroleum Association.

WHAT DOES
ECONOMIC
DO
IN ALBERTA

Nine years ago the Department of Economic Affairs was founded "to further and encourage orderly economic cultural and social development for the betterment of the people of the Province in accordance with the principles and requirements of a democracy, and to assist in and advance the proper rehabilitation of men and women returning to the Province from the armed services of Canada and from war industries.

Since that time the Department has made every effort to fulfill its dual responsibility. The rehabilitation of members of the armed forces and war industries has been accomplished. Now the betterment of the people of the Province is of paramount importance and shall continue to be for a long time to come.

To provide greater security more contentment, better living and cultural and social development for the people of Alberta is the work of the Department of Economic Affairs.

There are nine branches in the Department which execute these aims:

Alberta House in London, England represents the Province in Britain and promotes interest in immigration, industrial opportunities and general information about Alberta among the British people;

Man does not live by bread alone; and to foster the need of mind and spirit the Cultural Activities Branch coordinates participation in libraries, music, drama, art and handicraft;

Alberta's manifold activities and attractions are depicted by motion pictures, slides and photographs by the Film and Photographic Branch;

Industries mean greater prosperity, and so the Industrial Development Branch promotes interest among industrial and business leaders as well as assisting them with many problems;

The thousands of immigrants who wish to settle in Alberta are screened and assisted in the establishment of their homes in the Province by the Immigration Branch;

News releases, articles, booklets, posters and advertisements about the Province are prepared and sent by the Publicity Bureau;

The Public Relations Office serves as liaison between the Government of Alberta and delegations, conventions and individuals visiting the Province.

The duties of the various Branches of the Department in the Southern part of Alberta are carried out by the Southern Area Office in Calgary;

Economic and social betterment are greatly aided by the tourist industry, and the Travel Bureau promotes this valuable trade by advertising and distribution of road maps and travel literature to thousands of inquirers.
